The characteristic landscape is a blend of gently rolling hills leading on to sharply peaked mountains that pose a formidable barrier between Tuscany and regions to the south. CUISINE

Tuscan cooking is based upon using the most fresh and simple ingredients of the season including many legumes, cheeses, vegetables and fruits. Typical dishes are based upon what Tuscans find fresh and local at the market that week, making them often very easy to prepare and involving few ingredients. Although the food may be simple, it is rich in flavor, very hearty and quite filling. All meals are served accompanied by the regional bread: a white, plain, unsalted loaf.

WHERE TO EAT IN TUSCANY?

When you have so many options, finding the right one can be difficult. That's why we want to recommend some places to eat in this city.

Il Faconiere: The stylish, one Michelin starred, Il Faconiere, is a typically Tuscan fine dining restaurant. Located in an old lemon house that forms part of a bigger 17th century villa, it feels both charmingly rustic and very sophisticated, with a modern glass and wrought iron terrace looking over the surrounding countryside. It's one of the best places to sample the cuisine of the region, and the seasonal tasting menu is the best way to sample as much as you can. Address: Località S. Martino Bocena, 370, 52044 Cortona AR, Italia

Enoteca Pinchiorri: Currently owned by Giorgio Pinchiorri and Annie Feolde, the three star Michelin restaurant, Enoteca Pinchiorri, was named the 32nd best restaurant in the world by British Restaurant magazine. Found in Florence, the establishment serves dishes made from locally sourced ingredients, paired with tasty Tuscan wines. For a special treat, order the six course menu; though the costs are high, the quality of the food is well worth the price. Address: Enoteca Pinchiorri, Via Ghibellina, 87, Firenze, Italy

L'Imbuto: Inside Lucca's Contemporary Art Museum, you'll find creativity of a different kind at L'Imbuto. Chef Cristiano Tomei seeks to provide customers with a new dining experience using traditional Tuscan ingredients. Address: L'Imbuto, Via della Fratta, 36, Lucca LU, Italy
